SUICIDE BOMBER KILLS AT LEAST 70 AT PAKISTAN HOSPITAL

A suicide bomber in Pakistan killed at least 70 people and wounded more than 100 on Monday in an attack on mourners gathered at a hospital in Quetta, according to officials in the southwestern province of Baluchistan. The bomber struck as a crowd of mostly lawyers and journalists crammed into the emergency department to accompany the body of a prominent lawyer who had been shot and killed in the city earlier in the day, Faridullah, a reporter who was among the wounded, told Reuters. Abdul Rehman Miankhel, a senior official at the government-run Civil Hospital, where the explosion occurred, told reporters that at least 70 people had been killed, with more than 112 wounded, as the casualty toll spiked from initial estimates. LAWMAKER'S YOUNG SON DIES IN ACCIDENT AT KANSAS WATER PARK

The young son of a Kansas lawmaker died at a popular water park in Kansas City on Sunday in an apparent accident on what has been dubbed the world's tallest water slide, officials and media said. Rep. Scott Schwab confirmed in a statement to media that his son, Caleb Thomas Schwab, had died in the accident at Schlitterbahn water park in Kansas on Sunday afternoon. "As we try and mend our home with him no longer with us, we are comforted knowing he believed in his savior, Jesus, and they are forever together now. We will see him another day," Schwab said in a statement. Schlitterbahn spokeswoman Winter Prosapio said the child died while riding the Verruckt water slide, which is the world's tallest water slide, according to Guinness World Records, at more than 168 feet tall. MUDSLIDES TRIGGERED BY STORM CLAIM 40 LIVES IN EASTERN MEXICO

Mudslides triggered by intense rainfall in eastern Mexico killed 40 people as saturated hillsides collapsed onto modest homes in the wake of now-dissipated Tropical Storm Earl. The death toll rose after state governors in the two most affected states confirmed two more deaths from a series of mudslides that struck hillside communities. The head of national emergency services previously put the death toll at 38, the vast majority of whom were found in Puebla state, while the remainder died in neighboring Veracruz. Rafael Morena Valle, governor of Puebla state, said canine units were searching for the missing, but the number of unaccounted for residents was unclear. REUTERS

YIMBY takes a stand against gentrification

Yes In My Backyard group advocates creating more affordable housing to meet demand for urban living.

JAKE TABER
letters@metro.us

In cities with a reputation as innovation hubs for their tech and entrepreneurial leadership, such as Boston, real estate prices are soaring and available housing is dwindling.

But often new, affordable housing is restricted by local ordinances or neighborhood opposition. Enter YIMBY — Yes In My Backyard — to champion the cause that gentrification doesn't have to be a steamroller.

Unlike the more familiar NIMBY, or Not In My Backyard, YIMBYs encourage affordable development of low-cost housing in their neighborhoods. They can be found in exorbitantly expensive San Francisco; Boulder, Colorado, which hosted a national YIMBY conference this year and in the Boston area.

Jesse Kanson-Benanav heads A Better Cambridge (ABC), a YIMBY advocacy group currently pressing for zoning reform to increase the number of affordable units in Cambridge. A project manager for the Somerville Community Corporation with a masters in urban planning from MIT, Kanson-Benanav heads up ABC on the side. Lower rents aren't his only goal, though: He believes that we should leave the suburbs behind and embrace high-density living.

> "You want to be in these amenity-rich cities, where you have great outdoor spaces, tremendous job opportunity, and a higher quality of living."
> Grinnell

"After I went through the MIT urban planning program, I started to have a different take on density," he said. "I started to believe that higher density development, when done well in the right spots, near transit, jobs, so on and so forth, really can start to resolve some of the social isolation and environmental degradation caused by suburban sprawl over the last century."

Kanson-Benanav started ABC in 2012 in response to a petition to reduce height and density allowances for Central Square. Today, he and ABC are advocating for, among other regulatory changes, an increase in the percentage of affordable units that Cambridge requires of new developments. The cutoff would be 20 percent so as not to scare off developers.

Max Grinnell is a writer and self-described "urbanologist" who teaches courses on urban studies and community development at Boston University and MassArt. While he understands opposition to more and denser housing development by property owners who fear it will affect their lifestyle or property values, the demand for urban living isn't going to end soon.

"You want to be in these amenity-rich cities, where you have great outdoor spaces, tremendous job opportunity and a higher quality of living," Grinnell explained. "[And] If you are coming in to work at Logan Airport, and you can only afford to live in some city 30 miles away, [a lot] of your time is spent in transit."

Some are cautious of YIMBY groups for other reasons. Their pro-development stance leads some to wonder whether they might be in the pocket of real-estate developers looking to lend their projects more credibility. Though ABC currently supports the Mass & Main development in Central Square, Kanson-Benanav says his group has no affiliation with any developer.

Meanwhile, Kanson-Benanav is thinking regionally, too; he wants to link up with other local YIMBY groups, like Walk Up Roslindale and Villages Newton.

"It has to fall on every community in the region to pay their fair share," he said. "We plan to make this a regional, if not a statewide, movement."

Prosecutors: Boston PD veteran could avoid prison for fraud

The officer purchased $5,000 worth of gift cards from a shoplifting ring, the U.S. attorney said.

A Boston Police veteran is on trial over a shoplifting plot. NICOLAUS CZARNECKI Officer Eddie B. Odney, a nine-year veteran of the Boston Police Department, is expected to plead guilty to access device fraud at a federal hearing Monday.

The 38-year-old can avoid prison time if the judge accepts his plea and the officer permanently resigns from the force, the Boston Herald reported.

Odney allegedly bought $5,000 worth of department-store gift cards from a member of a shoplifting ring, according to the Boston Globe. Authorities contend Odney knew the cards were obtained illegally. He made over $1,600 in purchases at various department stores with the cards last year, according to legal filings.

The officer was placed on administrative leave in February, the Globe reported at the time.

The plea deal he struck with U.S. Attorney Carmen Ortiz's office includes one year of probation in lieu of a prison sentence as long as Odney resigns from the Boston police and gives up any chance of reinstatement.

U.S. District Court Judge Mark L. Wolf is not tied to that agreement, the Boston Herald reported, and Odney could face up to 10 years in prison.

A SALUTE TO SHORTS

Mayor Walsh defends cargo shorts, saying they're 'most comfortable things ever'

Last week, a debate about cargo shorts divided the nation. Now, Mayor Marty Walsh has weighed in.

Walsh took to Twitter Monday to add his two cents to the controversial topic, along with a picture of himself decked out in the highly disputed fashion choice.

The internet ire started after Nicole Hong of the Wall Street Journal wrote an article titled, "Nice cargo shorts! You're sleeping on the sofa."

Hong's story opens with a man who was down to only one pair of cargo shorts because his wife threw away his other pairs. Later on, she features a woman who, Hong writes, "doesn't like the idea of being seen in public with her husband when he's wearing cargo shorts, which make him look like a 'misshapen lump.'"

Hong's piece sparked altercations all across the web between those who oppose the many-pocketed men's clothing item and those who consider cargo shorts a summer staple.

Walsh found himself in the middle of that argument after he wore cargo shorts to Sunday's Open Newbury Street event. After some took to Twitter to mock the mayor's fashion choice, he defended the outfit.

Walsh salutes his cargo shorts on Twitter. TWITTER

"I love my cargo shorts. They are the most comfortable things ever," Walsh wrote on Twitter.

Some people agreed with Walsh, like his Chief of Staff Dan Koh, who tweeted "Preach, Boss!" Others showed that they were with Walsh by tweeting pictures of their own cargo shorts. But not everyone felt the same way.

"If you can't imagine George Clooney, Cary Grant or Don Draper wearing it, please don't put it on. Regards, Women Everywhere," one woman tweeted.

Police: Google manager from NYC killed in Massachusetts woods

"Please use an abundance of caution. ... you can't be too careful."

JASON NUCKOLLS
@MetroNewYork
jason.nuckolls@metro.us

A 27-year-old woman's body was found in a wooded area near Princeton, Massachusetts, after she was reported missing when she did not return from a jog.

On Sunday evening, police were searching for Vanessa Marcotte, who was visiting her mother in Princeton from her home in New York City, when authorities found her body in the woods about half a mile from her family's house, CBS Boston reported. An initial investigation indicated that Marcotte, who was last seen on Brooks Station Road, was killed between 1 p.m. and 4 p.m.

Vanessa Marcotte PROVIDED

"A preliminary review of the body has led detectives to believe this is a homicide investigation," Worcester District Attorney Joseph Early Jr. said to WCVB. "We do not know if this is a random act."

Investigators said Marcotte was sexually assaulted and set on fire, a source said, Fox 25 Boston reported.

Marcotte, an account manager at Google, grew up in nearby Leominster, according to WCVB. She had been reported missing for about seven hours by the time her body was discovered around 8 p.m.

"Please use an abundance of caution," Early was quoted by CBS Boston. "Right now we have a very active investigation going on — you can't be too careful."

A disenchanted Republican, fearing Trump, launches third-party run

There is virtually no chance that the newly announced candidate, Evan McMullin, could win and only a slight chance he will even be able to get his name on the ballots of key states.

Donald Trump GETTY IMAGES

Evan McMullin FACEBOOK

A former CIA officer and congressional staffer on Monday launched a long-shot bid for president, a Republican billing himself as a conservative alternative to Donald Trump who disenchanted voters can rally around.

Evan McMullin has no name recognition across the country and was not even well known in the Capitol where until Monday he was the chief policy director for the organizational body of all Republicans in the House of Representatives.

But that will not stop some conservatives from pitching him as an option in the Nov. 8 election for those who never warmed to Trump and remain adamantly opposed to Democrat Hillary Clinton.

"Donald Trump appeals to the worst fears of Americans at a time we need unity, not division," McMullin wrote in a letter announcing his candidacy. "With the stakes so high for our nation and at this late stage in the process, I can no longer stand on the sidelines."

McMullin's campaign was first reported by MSNBC and BuzzFeed. He could not be immediately reached for comment.

Trump was formally anointed his party's nominee last month after beating 16 rivals in the state-by-state primary contests. But many Republicans have been concerned about Trump's policies, such as his proposal to temporarily ban Muslims from entering the country and his free-wheeling, often insulting, rhetoric.

McMullin has never held public office. In addition to lacking a quick source of campaign cash, he will face immediate hurdles to try to get his name on enough ballot papers to make himself a serious candidate.

Texas, for example, requires third-party candidates to get more than 79,000 signatures from residents who did not vote in either the Republican or Democratic primary. And the deadline for that was in early May.

Deadlines to get on the ballots have also lapsed for North Carolina, Illinois and Florida, all large states that also could be pivotal in the election.

The best McMullin could likely hope for would be to simply play spoiler to Trump in a handful of states, eating away at the New York real estate developer's ability to win states that are generally reliably Republican. REUTERS

BRIEF

Trump seeks a campaign reset with economic speech in Detroit

Republican Donald Trump sought to regain momentum for his White House campaign on Monday by proposing sweeping tax breaks, cuts to federal regulations and a revival of the stalled Keystone XL oil pipeline project.

The New York businessman used an address on the economy to try to turn the page after a week of missteps in which he came under heavy criticism, including from some in his own party, and rival Democrat Hillary Clinton surged ahead in opinion polls with three months to go until the Nov. 8 election.

Trump followed prepared remarks rather than using the free-wheeling style at rallies that has often produced controversial comments. He also kept his cool as some 14 protesters jumped to their feet and shouted at him at intervals as he spoke at the Detroit Economic Club.

Most of the interruptions were at one- or two-minute intervals, giving the appearance of a coordinated effort to rattle him. He was also cheered repeatedly by the crowd.

Trump's remarks appeared targeted at both an affluent business community and working people, in particular those who have suffered from a decline in U.S. manufacturing in cities such as Detroit.

He said his plan would include imposing a temporary moratorium on new federal regulations, reducing rates for income and corporate taxes, and establishing new provisions for working parents dealing with child-care costs. REUTERS

Pallets of bottled water are seen ready for distribution in a warehouse January 21, 2016, in Flint, Michigan. GETTY IMAGES

Study: Social costs of Flint, Michigan, water crisis total $395M

The study calculated the lifetime economic losses expected to be suffered for every exposed child. The U.S. lead health standard has been lowered repeatedly since the 1960s, but according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, no safe level has been identified.

The social costs stemming from dangerous levels of lead in the drinking water of Flint, Michigan, such as the effect on children's health, amount to $395 million, according to an analysis by a professor at the Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health.

The total takes into account some 8,000 children believed exposed to lead poisoning in Flint since April 2014, when the financially struggling city, under the control of a state-appointed emergency manager, switched its water source from Detroit's municipal system to the Flint River to save money.

The river water was more corrosive than the Detroit system's and caused more lead to leach from Flint's aging pipes. Lead can be toxic and children are especially vulnerable. The city switched back last October.

The crisis has prompted lawsuits by parents in Flint, which has a population of about 100,000, who say their children have shown dangerously high levels of lead in their blood.

"We should never ignore the human costs of lead poisoning," study author Peter Muennig, an associate professor at the university, said in a statement released with his analysis, published in a letter to the journal Health Affairs.

"Even relatively low levels of exposure may rob children of IQ points and predispose them to violent behavior later in life," Muennig said.

Overall societal costs of all low-level lead exposures in the United States — measured as lost economic productivity, welfare use and criminal justice system costs — was over $4.5 billion last year, according to the study.

In July, six state employees in Michigan were criminally charged in connection with the case. Some critics have called for high-ranking state officials, including Gov. Rick Snyder, to be charged. Snyder said in April he believed he had not done anything criminally wrong. REUTERS

Florida is investigating apparent new case of locally transmitted Zika

Florida health officials are investigating a new non-travel-related case of the Zika virus in Palm Beach County, but it is not yet clear whether the person contracted the virus from local mosquitoes or from a recent trip to Miami.

Gov. Rick Scott said in a statement on Monday that the infected person recently traveled to Miami-Dade County, which is experiencing an outbreak of Zika caused by local mosquito transmission. So far, 16 people have been infected in the Miami area. The Palm Beach case brings the state's tally to 17.

An investigation was underway to determine how the person in Palm Beach County became infected.

The governor said the state still believed active transmission of the virus were confined to a 1-square-mile area in Miami-Dade County that includes Miami's Wynwood district.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is warning pregnant women to avoid this area in Miami because Zika has been tied to birth defects, including microcephaly, which can cause severe developmental problems. REUTERS

Muslim teen sues Texas school district after arrest over homemade clock

The suit claims the Irving Independent School District and the city, west of Dallas, discriminated against the teen because of his religion.

The family of a Muslim boy, who was arrested last year after taking a homemade digital clock to a Dallas-area high school, sued the Texas school district and the city where he once lived on Monday, saying they violated the teenager's civil rights.

The school district in a statement denied violating the student's rights and said it could provide no further comment because the matter was in litigation.

The family has previously demanded $15 million from the city of Irving and the school district.

The 2015 arrest of Ahmed Mohamed, then a 14-year-old bespectacled ninth-grader who dabbled in robotics and attended high school in Irving, had ignited a social media firestorm.

Irving police accused him of making a hoax bomb.

"The only way to get justice is through money," Mohamed told a news conference in Texas on Monday.

After Mohamed was seen in a NASA T-shirt in handcuffs, the Twitter hashtag #IStandWithAhmed trended globally, and the teenager was praised by Facebook chief executive officer Mark Zuckerberg, who said: "Having the skill and ambition to build something cool should lead to applause, not arrest."

A homemade clock made by Ahmed Mohamed is seen in an undated picture released by the Irving Texas Police Department. IRVING TEXAS POLICE DEPARTMENT HANDOUT

"I lost my home, I lost my creativity. I used to love building things but now I can't ... I've lost my security."

Ahmed Mohamed

A few months after the incident, Ahmed and his family moved to Qatar after the teen has accepted an offer from the Qatar Foundation to study at its Young Innovators Program. The announcement of the move came a few hours after Ahmed visited the White House for an astronomy night hosted by President Barack Obama.

The teen, a U.S. citizen, returned to the United States a few weeks ago for summer vacation and plans to return soon to Qatar to attend a private school after receiving death threats in the United States. REUTERS

Power outage at Delta causes flight cancellations, delays

Delta Air Lines Inc. canceled hundreds of flights and delayed many others on Monday after an outage hit its computer systems, grounding planes and stranding passengers of one of the world's largest carriers at airports around the globe.

Atlanta-based Delta, the second-largest U.S. airline by passenger traffic, said it had canceled 451 flights after a power outage that began around 2:30 a.m. Eastern Daylight Time in Atlanta. Flights gradually resumed about six hours later.

The disruption could deal a blow to the reputation of Delta, which for months canceled far fewer flights than rivals and boasted of its successes to corporate and leisure customers to win their loyalty.

Travelers wait in line at the Delta check-in counter at LaGuardia Airport in the Queens borough of New York City. GETTY IMAGES

Delta said it was investigating the cause of the "systemwide outage." As of 1:30 p.m., it was operating about 1,679 of its nearly 6,000 scheduled flights.

The problems arose after a switchgear, which helps control and switch power flows like a circuit breaker in a home, malfunctioned for reasons that were not immediately clear, said Georgia Power spokesman John Kraft.

The utility, which provides electricity to most counties in Georgia, earlier sent a team to investigate, Kraft said. The problem has not affected other Georgia Power customers, he said.

The carrier was probably running a routine test of its backup power supplies when the switchgear failed and locked Delta out of its reserve generators as well as from Georgia Power, industry analyst and former airline executive Robert Mann said. That would result in a shutdown of Delta's data center, which controls bookings, flight operations and other critical systems, he said.

Seth Rogen settles the Bloom vs. Bieber debate

Could it be? Another Orlando Bloom versus Justin Bieber battle? Except this time, it's the battle of the sausages, and "Sausage Party" star/expert Seth Rogen, carefully compared the two.

That's right, last week Katy Perry's boyfriend's junk was in full bloom on their romantic getaway to Hawaii. But his arch-nemesis, Biebs, took a trip to Italy with his new lady friend, model Sahara Ray, where the two went skinny-dipping.

So, whose meat is meatier? Seth Rogen knows. The actor appeared on Andy Cohen's "Watch What Happens Live" and gave his input.

Rogen answered without hesitation. "I've seen Justin's before, so maybe I was just like, you know, 'I've been there, done that,' a little bit. And it's a wonderful one! But Orlando's I was really happy with. Good for him! He's in great shape overall," he said. "So I thought, honestly, Orlando's probably a bigger guy, and proportionally, his penis looked to scale, which makes me think overall it's probably bigger."

We wonder what Miranda Kerr thinks of all of this.

Snoop and Martha teaming up for TV

Snoop Dogg and Martha Stewart are teaming up for the buddy comedy of all buddy comedies — except it's more of an unscripted reality series/cooking competition where they serve dinner to their friends on VH1. The dream duo will star in a TV series with the working title "Martha & Snoop's Dinner Party," in which the two play host to a rotating cast of their celebrity friends.

In case this seems like an unlikely pairing, D-o-double-g and the lifestyle host have a history of small-screen appearances together — including the time he was on her show to make "special Christmas brownies" and when they quizzed each other on ABC's "$100,000 Pyramid." Or as Snoop tells Variety: "My homegirl Martha and I have a special bond that goes back. We're gonna be cooking, drinking and having a good time with our exclusive friends. Can't wait for you to see how we roll together!"

The series is set to premiere this fall and will air weekly on VH1. We can't wait to see how Martha rolls, too, Snoop.

In "Don't Think Twice," Mike Birbiglia and Chris Gethard explore the culture of improv.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

"Don't Think Twice" opened in theaters Aug. 5. JON PACK

"Saturday Night Live" greats are quick to tell you about their glory days of doing improv. Troupes like Second City (Tina Fey, Chris Farley), Upright Citizens Brigade (Amy Poehler, Horatio Sanz) and Groundlings (Kristin Wiig, Will Ferrell) should sound as familiar as their alumni who hit it big. But what happens to the troupe members who don't make it to the big time?

Birbiglia GETTY IMAGES

That was the difficult question that writer-director Mike Birbiglia explores in "Don't Think Twice," a comedy about a group of friends who do improv comedy together until one of them breaks big. Naturally, this causes some conflict.

We chat with Birbiglia, who also stars in the film, and his co-star Chris Gethard about the art of comedy and the unnatural art of filming natural improv.

In the improv classes in the film, you guys are constantly nailing in the point "don't think twice." At what point did you really start to let go as comedians?

Chris Gethard: To me, as an improviser, one of the most exhilarating parts is when you start getting laughs and you're not sure why they're laughing. When you're in a scene and you're just linking up with the other person on stage, and you forget that there's an audience but you incidentally hear them reacting — that's the freeing, powerful moment.

How did you both start doing improv?

Gethard: I started classes at Upright Citizens Brigade the week of my 20th birthday. It was the Island of Misfit Toys; everyone was a weirdo and supercreative. It was the place where I belonged. I always felt like an outcast, and to show up where you're in a theater and it doesn't matter if you're weird or young, if you're funny and work hard, you can hang out.

Mike Birbiglia: For me, when I was a freshman in college, I was cast into the Georgetown Players improv group. Charna Halpern and Liz Allen from Improv-Olympic came to teach workshops, and I think Liz is probably the best improv teacher in the country. Those guys coming to Georgetown changed the way I looked at everything.

Some real prompts and bits from your own improv experiences made it into the film. How did that work?

Gethard: I think Mike did such an interesting thing, because it's hard to film improv. By definition it's something that's happening in the moment. [And for the film] there were certain story points that needed to happen in those improvised scenes, and those were scripted. But then Mike transcribed some real improv shows, that added another layer, and then there were portions of those improv shows that were actually improvised in front of an audience of extras. He did such a nice job of blending them together so that the moments that are really improvised, you can really feel it. And I think it speaks to Mike's skills that it's very hard to tell which parts are improvised and which are not.

Birbiglia: I tried to have the whole film feel like it's just happening. I rewrote the script 10 or 12 times over 18 months, but on the day, I'd say, "Whatever feels real to you, just say. Memorize the lines, then forget them. And whatever comes out, comes out."

Humidity-proof your hair

You can do better than a ponytail, says our expert.

TINA CHADHA
@TinaatMetro
tina.chadha@metro.us

We're about to reach peak humidity this week, but that doesn't mean a basic updo is your everyday solution.

"If I see one more topknot on the train," exclaims Jenny Balding Cutler Salon/Redken styling and grooming expert. "We can use our imagination more than that."

Jenny Balding PROVIDED

Here, she tells us how to look cool despite the steamy temps.

Redken Frizz Dismiss Rebel Tame, $22, Ulta.com PROVIDED

For curly hair, the best way to fight frizz is to moisturize, says Jenny Balding. ISTOCK

Dry shampoo is your new BFF

Shorter hair is so on-trend right now and "not everyone can pull their hair back since they've chopped it into the latest texturized bob," Balding points out. Her solution for those whose only option is to leave their hair down: Use a dry shampoo — even on clean hair.

"Don't save your dry shampoo for when your hair is oily," she says. "Use it as a styling tool and it will prevent your hair from getting slick or sweaty quicker."

Balding says once you've washed your hair, style it or let it air dry then spray dry shampoo all through the roots and midline. "It's going to give you some body."

Don't fight your curls

For curly hair, it's all about moisturizing your locks. "Don't fight your curls," says Balding. "Look at what you can do to make your texture work for the humidity instead of trying to get, say, the perfect beachy wave. If your hair is going to be really curly, it's going to be really curly."

Balding recommends applying a deep moisturizing treatment twice a week, from midlength to the ends of your hair. "That's going to put you on a good track, because once your hair is more moisturized, it's less likely to get frizzy and go absolutely mental when you step outside," she says.

Balding also recommends using a light styling cream. She likes Redken's Frizz Dismiss Rebel Tame. "It really cuts the frizz."

Step-up your updo

Face it, when the heat wave comes on, everyone just wants their hair off their neck. "Boxer braids are so on-trend at the moment, but if you can't do that, just use your imagination to style it a bit differently," advises Balding. Her suggestion: Sweep your hair to the side, twist it and pin it "to still make it look stylish but not your usual topknot — which everyone and their granny is doing right now."

Sylvain Le Hen barrette, $50, quietstorms.com PROVIDED

Another look Balding is loving: statement hair accessories. "Even doing a half-up, half-down and using a nice clasp in the back just to bring that together," she says. To achieve the look, the stylist says take half the hair from just above the ear bring it back just above the nape, and then use a barrette to hold it together.

MAKE HEALTHY YOUR NEW HAPPY

Five books to keep you optimistic in these crazy times.

NICOLE HUNTER
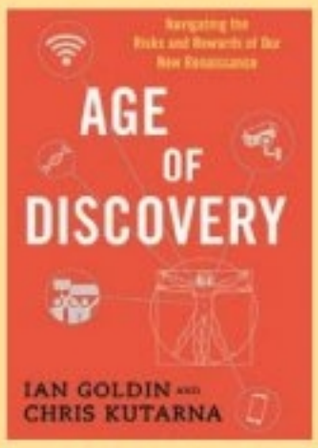
letters@metro.us

From David Bowie and Prince, to Orlando and Nice, 2016 has been many things, most of them heartbreaking. And don't get us started on the new lows reached during this presidential campaign.

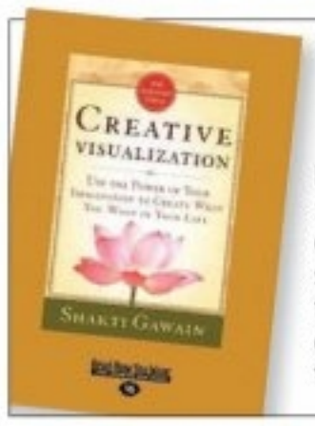
We're living in a time of great disruption and change, which is either terrifying or motivating, depending on how you look at it. Here, a list of books old and new that will help you be the change you want to see.

"The Age Of Discovery"

by Ian Goldin and Chris Kutarna



Released in May, this nonfiction book puts the sweeping economic, political and digital changes we're witnessing into historical context. Goldin and Kutarna, two Oxford academics, argue that despite the abundance of troubling headlines, we're experiencing a new renaissance and we're living in the greatest time in history to be alive as a result. On the days when you've received one depressing news alert too many, break this book out to gain a sense of perspective and renewed motivation to play the long game.



"Creative Visualization"

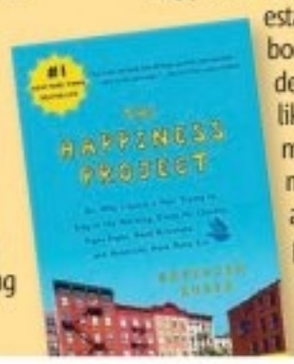
by Shakti Gawain

In this self-help classic published in 1978, Gawain lays out a tutorial in creative visualization, the practice of visualizing what you want in life in order to create positive change. Modern-day success stories like Net-a-Porter founder Natalie Massenet swear by it.

"The Happiness Project"

by Gretchen Rubin

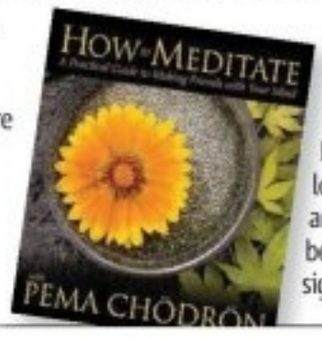
What better way to turn 2016 around than by following Rubin's lead and devoting the year to the pursuit of happiness? The book mixes real-life trial and error, thought-provoking commentary and academic research to deliver a completely doable guide to contentment. Her podcast, "Happier," advances the work established in her book, with episodes devoted to things like, "accept myself, expect more of myself" and "don't let the perfect be the enemy of the good."

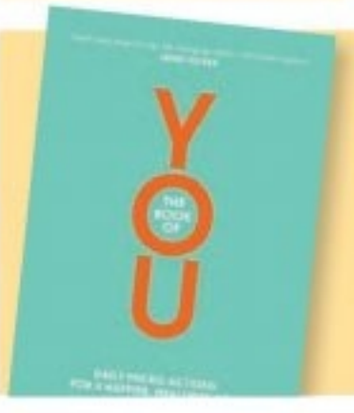


"How To Meditate: A Practical Guide to Making Friends with Your Mind"

by Pema Chodron

This is less of a self-help manual and more of a practical guide to the very useful skill of meditation. It's an especially valuable ability to have on those days when you check Facebook and log off feeling angrier than before you signed on.





"The Book Of You"

by Nora Rosendahl, Nelli Lahteenmaki and Aleksi Hoffman

If far-reaching theories are not your thing, try the small, actionable tips outlined in this book — things like writing down something you love about yourself, being nice to a stranger or smiling when you don't necessarily feel like it ("research shows that the mere act of smiling will actually make you feel happier"). It sounds cringeworthy on paper, but is a good reminder of the power of being kind to yourself and other people.

Popularity of Raisman soaring

All eyes, literally, are on Aly Raisman and the U.S. women's gymnastics team.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

At this point, the Summer Olympics should just be renamed "women's gymnastics, and a bunch of other sports."

That's how popular the sport has become during the summer games in the United States as only Michael Phelps swimming events can compete, TV-ratingswise, with the girls of the mat, bars, beam and vault.

Leading the way for this year's women's gymnastics team is, of course, Needham's own Aly Raisman. One could argue that Raisman is already one of the most recognizable Olympic athletes of all-time — given that this is her second go-round in what is the most-watched Olympic sport. The 22-year-old Raisman has grown up in front of America at the height of the popularity of social media, and it shows. You think Mary Lou Retton had nearly half a million Twitter followers in her day? (Yeah, unfair … but for the record Retton has 24,000 followers today compared to Raisman's 467,000.)

For sure, some of the popularity of women's gymnastics is due to the fact that many men are attracted to the athletes. An unreal 38.7 million viewers (especially in today's online streaming culture) tuned in to watch the final night of gymnastics in London in 2012, and this past Sunday's women's gymnastics competitions provided a hint that we're in for the same type of TV numbers.

Meanwhile, male gymnast Olympic competitions are watched by millions less people and the men on the current team are far from household names. On Monday, a story ran in the Wall Street Journal, titled, "U.S. Male Gymnasts Want to Be Objectified," with the subhead of, "Even when they medal, they stand in the shadow of female gymnasts. Might the answer be disrobing?"

Brainstorming ways to make men's gymnastics more marketable, U.S. gymnast Sam Mikulak suggested that they be allowed to compete without their shirts on.

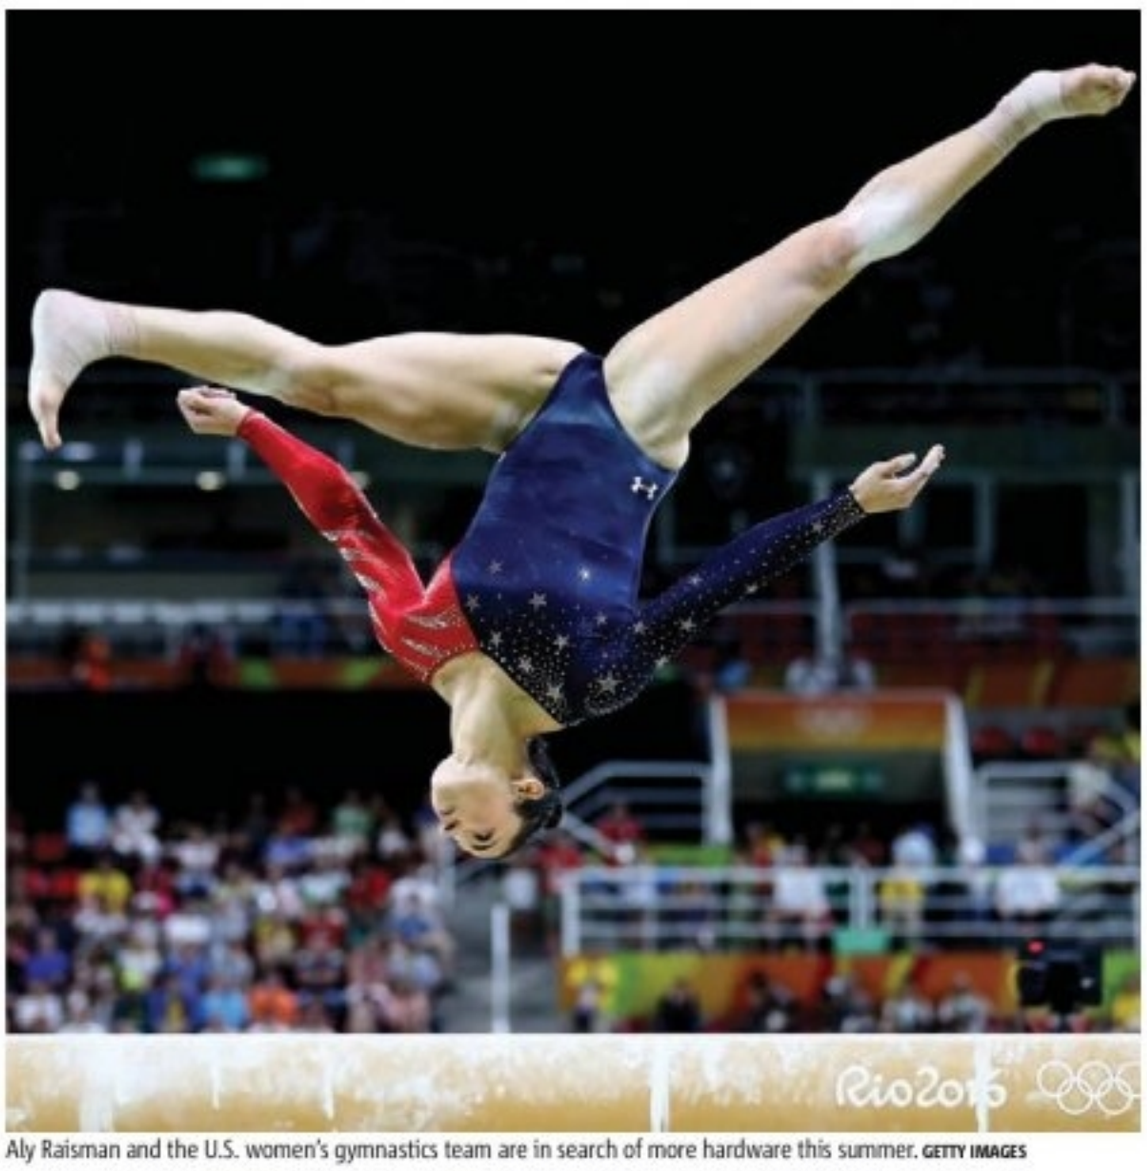
"People make fun of us for wearing tights," Mikulak told the Journal. "But if they saw how yoked we are maybe that would make a difference."

In 2015, Raisman posed mostly nude for ESPN The Magazine's Body Issue. There were plenty of social media comments directed at her during the 2012 games taking aim at her "jacked" body tone and Raisman addressed that topic with ESPN.

"I think imperfection is beauty," she said. "Instead of being insecure about my muscles, I've learned to love them. I don't even think of it as a flaw anymore because it's made me into the athlete that I am.

"As a gymnast you use every single part of your body. Everything from your wrist, your shoulders, your abs … I mean, even your pinky toe is important. Every part of your body has to be really, really strong."

All eyes will again be on the ever-popular Raisman and the U.S. women's team Tuesday in Rio, with the women's team all-around competition (7:30 p.m., NBC).



Aly Raisman and the U.S. women's gymnastics team are in search of more hardware this summer. GETTY IMAGES

Rick rolling

Rick Porcello has emerged as arguably the Red Sox' most consistent pitcher as he owns a 14-3 record, a 3.46 ERA, and he hasn't gone less than six innings in a start since June. Porcello will get the start Tuesday (7 p.m., NESN) at Fenway when the Sox host the lowly Yankees. GETTY IMAGES

Aries You may feel impulsive, but that isn't likely to pan out well for you. Take a moment to go over and organize your plans first. Do what's right.

Taurus Put your networking skills to use. Getting involved with groups and taking part in events that will help you keep abreast of industry news will lead to a prosperous new beginning.

Gemini Organize your time and don't make promises that will be impossible to keep. Overdoing it in any manner will cause problems at home and work.

Cancer Stretch your imagination, think outside the box and utilize your time optimally in order to get the most bang for the least effort. Your savvy, organized and precise actions will pay off.

Leo Offer incentives to anyone who has something you want in order to get your way. Sincerity coupled with action is all it will take. A unique approach will capture plenty of interest.

Virgo Put emotional matters to rest by being up front about the way you feel and how you want to move forward personally and professionally. Romance is in the stars.

Libra Try something new and exciting, as it will give you the energy and motivation you need to bring about personal change. If what you are doing isn't working for you, do something about it.

Scorpio Do what makes you happy. Adjust your schedule or routine in order to have time to enjoy life, experiment and gain experience. Romance is highlighted and will improve your life.

Sagittarius Stick to your promises or you will ruin your reputation. Arguments will lead only to isolation, not to resolution. Find alternative ways to get along and get things done.

Capricorn You can work around anyone who gets in your way. Your ability to manipulate situations will play in your favor. Don't worry about anyone who walks away.

Aquarius You can settle differences by direct negotiation. Don't let an emotional situation cost you personally or financially. Make whatever change is necessary to protect a relationship.

Pisces Take care of business before someone muscles in. You will be outmaneuvered if you aren't up to date with the latest technology or methods. EUGENIA LAST
